\textbf{Abstract}

July the 2005 saw a youngster trampled to death during the Kenya Morocco World Cup cum Africa cup qualifiers match in Nairobi. Several other fans were injured. This led to the ban of Kenyan fans into the stadium during the next home Match against Tunisia played in Sept. 2005. Most people welcomed the ban and termed it as a wake up call to the organizers: There were other who criticized FIFA accusing them of unfairness given the fact that other serious accidents had happened elsewhere in the past and that no serious punishments were met on the federations.

This study therefore sought to establish the circumstance surrounding the incidence on that day, and several other stadium disasters involving soccer in Africa. The study also suggest ways and means how such occurrences can be prevented in future.

\textbf{Key wards}: Disaster, death, stadium. Legal implication stampede.
